First off this is a very important case and domain owners should read about it, and I am asking for your help

Important --- The old owners of these names have to get legal advice for themselves

Every single domain might have a different story, BUT until they contact legal counsel they have ZERO chance in getting their names back.

About the case:

This is the best, simplest read*

There are more active cases, but I don't have links to them.. please send me if you have them or update them here.

<http://domainnamewire.com/2016/06/23/lawsuit-ensnares-innocent-domain-investors/>

The key thing is that a group of domains were taken from domain owners accounts with very little / 'questionable' notice.

Some domain owners did respond to this notice but many did not.

I am asking for help to get the domain owners that did NOT respond to get legal counsel NOW

Why ?

Because I got pulled into this case because of a domain I bought, that the old owner did NOT respond. I don't blame the old owner, I think he simply did not think it was real and was not experienced enough to know it was.

I had enough experience to know to get legal counsel, after the name was taken from my account

I am not worried about getting it back, what I don't like seeing so many domain owners/business being taken advantage off.

So

This is the list I have so far

<https://docs.google.com/spreadsheets/d/1K029yom8FhVTSSp28rYcZmqYlZgToU5k6nR80IWMZXQ/edit?usp=sharing>

I am looking for some people to help with two parts

1) getting the correct old email address for each of these names, even if it's 1 or 2 possible ones that is fine.

I did some work on this but I don't have access to domain tools anymore and I think some of the info is not correct on domainiq.

2) I need someone that can communicate effectively with Chinese domain owners.

Most of the names they got were from china, I feel the 'email notice' they sent was ignored or did not get through their spam filters. I know of at least one western owners that 100% did not get the email notice they sent.

Either way.. the most important thing is to get a hold of these domain owners and to tell them to contact a lawyer

I highly recommend they use Dentons.com

steven.geiszler@dentons.com

Why Dentons?

They are already defending a huge group of us, as they know the case well and the cost is better the more of us that pool together.

Buying these names

I highly recommend you DON'T buy any of these names they are trying to sell the names fast to raise funds for legal, but these names are 100% hot, they are not stolen but they are 100% not clean

I know of one domain broker that is selling them and they don't seem to really have done enough digging on this. He has his legal point of view, but I highly disagree with it as this is an ACTIVE case, this is not a done deal as he seems to think it is.

There are many more recent court documents, this is not most recent.. it is simply the one that Jeff used to get the names but there are many more since this started.

-- In his own words--

Hi Sam,

Attached is the most recent court document providing documentation of clear title of sale from the original owner. In addition we have been indemnified with regards to the sales process in our exclusive brokerage contract should any dispute arise. From the information we have been provided as the broker for the new portfolio, the former owners were provided a timeframe to dispute the domains in court and that timeframe has already passed. The domains were put back into the original owner's Registrar's account as ordered by the judge and we expect many more to be ordered over in the next few months.

If you have a contradictory legal document or something we should be aware of, please feel free to provide it. On our end we have done our due diligence to make sure the domains have a clear title of sale and we do our very best to make sure. It seems the original receiver pre-sold the domains for massive discounts in anticipation of the court's reversal ruling and should not have done so. Based on this information we are currently accepting bids for the domains.
